Baldwin breaks wrist as Sharks win roller hockey title

by Greg Eichelberger

Last week's championship game of the "C" League roller hockey division between the Sharks and Slashing Pumpkins at the Parkway Sports Complex in El Cajon was one for the ages.

It was also a sports reporter's dream, as the main event of the game practically cried out for such headlines as, "Right-Wing politician breaks the hand that feeds him," or "Conservative Assemblyman takes advantage of Liberal health care system," or any other angle one would have on a most unusual contest.

To begin with, the Pumpkins, led by all-star goalie, Joe Massi of Santee and high-scoring Carla Augustine (Lakeside) were heavy favorites, leading the division all season (eight weeks), and crushing their enemies with ease.

Their opponents, though, were the Sharks, a group of guys and ladies who, up until the arrival of Steve Baldwin, were mired in last place. The 77th district assemblyman breathed new life into the fish, averaging three goals and several assists per game.

"I feel that I helped raise the level of the other players," he said. "We got a few wins under our belt, qualified for the playoffs and then earned our way into the title game. We knew we could win it all."

Still, Augustine and company had a plan to deal with the so-called Wayne Gretzky of East County.

"We're going to be all over him," she said confidently before the game. "We plan to stop him from getting the passes, setting others up and keep him away from the goal."

Such strategy was sound in principal, but when it came time to execute, one obvious flaw developed. With so much concentration on Baldwin, other players, such as El Cajon's Tim "Woody" Woods, were able to break free.

In fact, Woods was so unencumbered that he banged home four goals in the first half alone, settling the affair almost as soon as it had begun.

Baldwin, in the meantime, added four assists and a goal of his own, completely smashing the spirit of the proud Pumpkins.

"It was a real fast-paced game," said Augustine, "but with so much effort to stop Steve, Tim just took over. Before we knew it, we were in a big hole."

For his part, Woods, a member of the Navy stationed aboard the U.S.S. Kitty Hawk, said he was surprised at his offensive display, but was grateful to contribute.

Then the weirdness began.

Taking a wrist shot from the point, with just a few minutes left in the first half, the talented sailor nailed the Republican standard-bearer in the right hand, fracturing it in four places. Baldwin's vaunted light, mobile (and some would say "cheap") garden gloves, so easy to maintain and control, afforded little protection against a hard plastic projectile traveling at over 40 mph.

"I tried to redirect the shot into the goal," claimed the two-term Assemblyman. "Unfortunately, I was off by just a few inches." His wife, Patty, and two boys, witnessed the horrible tragedy. When the hand went numb and began to swell to 10 times its normal size, Baldwin knew it was time to cash in on the state's liberal health system and get it taken care of.

The good thing is that even though a cast was placed on the arm from the elbow down, the legislative session is over and the injury will not prevent him from coaching his six-and-under charges on Saturdays. He will, however, not be able to compete for at least the next six weeks.

The Sharks, holding a 6-1 advantage, ventured into the second half, with only 20 minutes between themselves and the championship of local roller hockey.

They sealed that triumph when team captain Ed Tackett, whose wife, Chris, also plays for the team, blasted a clearing shot from deep in his own end. The orange puck then trickled past Massi to make the final margin 8-2, and log Tackett's name in the record books as the longest goal ever notched in the realm of the sport, well, at least at the Parkway Complex.

One last ugly event, a fight, took place before the conclusion, which resulted in the expulsion of two players, including Woods, from the game.

"That kind of thing is very, very unusual here," said Joe Noris, referee of the game. "It's a terrible thing to happen at a recreational contest, especially with all of the kids around."

Both players later apologized for their actions, and Woods indicated that he knew it was dumb, but he got caught up in the heat of the moment. "I'm usually a peacemaker," he commented.

Credit must also be given to the net keeper of the Sharks, unheralded Dan Girard, who stopped the Pumpkins time and time again, preserving the victory.

Tackett said, "The whole team did a great job."

Afterwards, the Sharks were presented with a mock-up of the Stanley Cup (a large Kentucky Fried Chicken soda container with a smaller coleslaw dish glued to the bottom), as a symbol of East County supremacy.

Monte Vista trying to reverse effects of graduation of all starters in '95

by Joe Naiman

It's not easy for a champion to repeat its title, and Monte Vista High School's football team was no exception – especially since every starter on the Monarchs' 1995 CIF-SD championship team was a senior.

The 1996 Monte Vista team finished with a 3-7 record. The 1-3 mark in Grossmont South conference play snapped a string of three consecutive league titles and the defending champions weren't even invited back to the CIF playoffs.

This year, the Monarchs lost their first two games, but coach Ed Carberry thinks the team is closer to the 12-1 squad from 1995 than the 1996 team.

The problem, Carberry explains, isn't a lack of talent, but mistakes made against teams to which one cannot allow such breaks.

The Monarchs allowed a 17-0 halftime lead against Orange Glen to evaporate, resulting in an 18-17 loss to the county's second-ranked team in the season opener.

The following week the Monarchs faced 1996 CIF-SD champion Castle Park, losing 20-5, in its home opener. A muffed fair catch on a punt led to a Castle Park recovery on the Monte Vista 14, and a poor punt gave Castle Park possession on the Monte Vista 38 to start another touchdown drive.

Despite the mistakes, the Monarchs' defense could hardly be criticized. Five Castle Park possessions ended with "three and out," and two of the winners touchdowns required successful fourth-down con- versions.

"I think because of our defense we're going to do well all year long. We're going to keep the games pretty close," said Carberry.

Monte Vista has the personnel to be competitive. Running back Steven Johnson and receivers Jamal St. Cyr and Brandon Campbell lead the offensive threats. Safety Troy Perdue, linebacker Jeremy Krass and defensive tackle Kurt Trower have stood out defensively this year.

This season, the Monarchs returned 13 starters from the previous year's team and have 24 seniors on the squad. Four juniors and two sophomores made the starting offensive or defensive squads.

"We really enjoy coaching them. They're a bunch of great guys that have come out here to work hard and put together the best team possible," said Carberry. He felt that if the team can eliminate the mistakes it has been making, especially in the kicking game, it can be successful.

The need to eliminate mistakes is especially important in the preseason, where Carberry is playing tough opposition. Following the Castle Park game, the Monarchs played at Carlsbad, the top ranked team in the county, losing 28-7.

The coach said that the team has been playing the top teams in the county, which had been our goal, and have been a mistake or two from beating them (except the last game).

Carberry feels that the Monarchs could get away with such mistakes against a team that wasn't in the top five in the county, as those teams will also make mistakes.

While the results have been adverse to the Monarchs' won-loss record, the team's play against top opposition encourages Carberry with regard to Grossmont League play, especially if the Monarchs can learn from their errors before their Oct. 17 conference opener against Helix.

Common sense ignored

My refrain of us not doing anything wrong over the last 20 years is not entirely true. The present problem with the Senior Nutrition Program at the Senior Center has brought something to light. Comments like, "This is the most God-awful building to work in." and "How could anyone design such a set of buildings?" abound. The shortage of useable space has to be at least part of the current problem.

When the design for the Senior Center was presented to the council, I was the lone dissenter. It seemed to me that one, rectangular building, with one set of utilities and a maximum of usable space would be prudent. I questioned the costs of building three units, one round like a silo, one rhomboidal in shape and a normal one, compared to the single, right angle construction. I was told that the difference was very minimal, if any.

Now, not being an engineer, but having dabbled a bit in carpentry, I could not believe that statement. Making 90 degree cuts is the simplest in drawing plans and conserves lumber and time. Odd angles and curves waste wood, take more time to draw blueprints and lay out cuts by the builder.

The architect had designed an award-winning structure which was to be a monument to his uniqueness and artistic talent. It did win an award. God knows who the judges were. After my very vocal protestations, he once took me aside and said," Dr. Burns, you will like it when it is finished." Well, I didn't like it then, and do not now.

True we do have an award winning complex. However, we also have one silo that is used by three pool players, a geometrically odd shaped building that is cramped and crowded in its use, and a third normal structure that is much too small for the needs it requires.

I know that it is beating a dead horse to repeat that it was poorly and expensively designed, and now is just inadequate, causing a major portion of the funding to be sent elsewhere due to lack of space.

I am not writing with a "Nya, Nya, Nya" attitude, being the only member of a past council to object to it and being over-ridden. I am trying to say that this is a very good example of common sense being ignored. Had we opted for a less flamboyant, single rectangle design, we would still have all the tenants with room to spare for the same money that was spent by "Visions, Inc" to get an Orchid which should have been an Onion (garlic, no less).

Future buildings, libraries, recreation complexes, parks, etc. should be mandated to be practical, usable to the max and economical in cost. I don't mean cheap, but rather just sensible engineering.

If someone will prove to me that cutting wood at odd angles (not 90 degrees), on curves with necessary layout and design, does not cost more in time and money, I will happily retract all of the above. If no one does, then, please don't let it happen again ...

The Candlestick Syndrome

by Joe Naiman

I'm willing to give the Padres a new public baseball stadium under the right conditions.

John Moores' actions have proven him deserving of a new stadium. He didn't start out asking for a new stadium. In fact, his predecessor had asked for a baseball-only stadium, but when Moores bought the team talk of such a stadium stopped. Moores didn't ask for a new stadium until the football configuration not only changed the seating structure towards football, but also kicked the Padres' offices out of the stadium.

Moores insists on a public vote before a publicly-funded stadium is to be built, and he is willing to put up a good portion of the money himself. Other than requesting public money, Moores' attitude is in stark contrast to that of Chargers owner Alex Spanos. If the Chargers can have a new stadium, so should John Moores.

What I am not willing to accept, however, is the idea that the new baseball stadium should be downtown.

Moores likes the historic Lane Field site, although baseball experts feel that the location is too small for a 1990s Major League facility. The civic establishment likes eastern downtown. I like Mission Valley or Kearny Mesa.

We went through the downtown issue eight years ago. Harry Cooper and Richard Esquinas had taken over operation of the San Diego Sports Arena and had planned to build a new Sports Arena, with private money, in the Golden Triangle. But the city of San Diego informed Cooper and Esquinas that if they wanted the permits, the arena would be part of downtown redevelopment. Cooper and Esquinas couldn't afford the more expensive downtown land without public funding, and the current Sports Arena has survived the management of Cooper and Esquinas.

There's something to be said for not abandoning decaying areas, but if urban redevelopment is the issue then the stadium should be in Southeast San Diego, with greater freeway access and more centrally located than downtown.

While some newer downtown stadiums have been successful, those areas are more urban and less suburban than in San Diego. Most of us go downtown primarily for business or legal purposes. Very few people who live outside the city of San Diego go to downtown for entertainment purposes only, especially those who bring children. Mass transit systems are more developed in other downtown areas, and the lack of land to the south or west of downtown San Diego makes the traffic situation in downtown Denver more comparable to downtown La Mesa than to downtown San Diego. Even downtown Baltimore has three directions in and out.

There's another facet of downtown San Diego having only two sides. It's by the coast. About 75 percent of San Diego County, and probably more of Tijuana, live inland. Affordability and traffic are some reasons many prefer to live inland than in coastal areas. Another important reason is preference for a drier climate.

The coastal climate is damper than inland areas. There's also an ocean breeze. And while attendance at Lane Field can't be used as an example due to a smaller population base and a higher proportion of weekday afternoon games in that era, the reason for abandoning the 21-year-old park in 1957 wasn't a desire to escape downtown, but that termites had destroyed too much of the structure.

Dodger Stadium is an inland ballpark. Candlestick Park, now 3Com Stadium, is a coastal park where the moisture and wind make night games uncomfortable. I attended a Tuesday night game there during their pennant-winning 1989 season which drew only 13,000. The Cleveland Indians' new ballpark is further inland than their previous park, which was nicknamed "The Mistake by the Lake" and carried the winds of Lake Erie.

Coastal moisture also translates into humidity. Goalie Clint Malarchuk, who played for both the San Diego and Las Vegas franchises of the International Hockey League, once stated that the San Diego Sports Arena was hotter and more uncomfortable than the Thomas and Mack Center.

Public safety and transit issues can be solved, but those who live inland because they don't like the coastal climate aren't going to enjoy spending three hours near the ocean. I grew up with a redhead who didn't like to attend afternoon games because of her sensitivity to the sun. Those who don't mind the coastal climate would attend games in a drier climate, but those who have problems with coastal areas aren't going to pay to attend a game in that part of town.

A ballpark in a coastal area appeals to those who go to the beach on Sunday instead of going to a sporting event. A baseball-only park in downtown San Diego would be a turnoff to existing fans.

We can let the taxpayers west of La Mesa pay for a stadium in Mission Valley, but under no means should the park be put downtown. Threats might be made that San Diego would lose the Padres, but if they move to west of Interstate 5, we've already lost them.

In the Service

Army Pfc. Jason W. Campbell, the son of Julia Cazaox of Lemon Grove and John Campbell of Spring Valley, has entered basic infantry training at Fort Benning, Columbus, Ga.

During the training, he will receive instruction in drill and ceremonies, map reading, tactics, military customs and courtesies and first aid. He will develop basic combat skills, and experience using various weapons available to the infantry soldier.

Campbell is a 1995 graduate of Mount Miguel High School.

West Hills to host fundraising 3-on-3 basketball tournament

by Marv Rosen

West Hills High School will be the site of a new 3-on-3 basketball tournament on Oct. 11 and Oct. 12, designed as a way to give players, of almost any age, a chance to "warm-up" for the upcoming competitive basketball season.

The tournament will also enable the Wolf Pack to generate some funds for much-needed basketball equipment at the school.

West Hills coach Jeff Armstrong said that it would also be one of the few tournaments of this type (3-on-3) which is played indoors and will be a first for East County.

The tournament is open to players from the third grade through a masters division for those over 40.

Other divisions include an "Over-the-Hill" (30 and over) and a special one for players 6' or less and an open division.

While the mail-in deadline is Oct. 8, the tournament will accept late registration through Oct. 10 at the school gymnasium.

Cost of the tournament is $55 per team (maximum of four players per team) for those teams signing up by mail and $65 for late registration.

The tournament is under the auspices of the BB Club and is sponsored by the National Scouting Report which helps athletes obtain scholarships.

The organization also helps students in other areas prepare for obtaining scholarships, such as in the arts.

A co-sponsor is Palomar Mountain Spring Water which will be providing water for the competitors.

Armstrong said that the 3-on-3 format allows more players to participate in the tourna ment than the usual five.

He noted that he is planning a similar spring tournament for those who have not had enough basketball during the regular season. It will also be a fundraiser.

The coach, who is in his second year at the school, brings a variety of experience to the school, including coaching the Saudi Arabia National Team in its try to reach the 1996 Atlanta Olympics.

He is a graduate of Point Loma College, where he was an NAIA All-American in 1977.

He coached for three years at Granite Hills from 1986 - 1989 and also at Saint Augustine for three years.

Sports Beat
with Greg Eichelberger

Hello again. Last year at this time, I was looking forward to covering the Padres in the National League division series against my hometown St. Louis Cardinals. Now I'm just grateful the season is over, for both teams.

Neither lived up to expectations (it's difficult to repeat, anyway), and, as far as the Friars are concerned, several key injuries, combined with sub-par middle relief, did them in. There will be no MVP, Manager or Fireman of the Year awards for 1997, but, as usual, Tony Gwynn will be claiming his eighth batting title, tying Honus Wagner, the Pirate great (unless, of course, Gwynn completely collapsed before the final game on Sunday).

Speaking of the team, we at Forum became the first East County publication to actually travel to Dodger Stadium to cover the team last week, and here are a few of this scribbler's observations. First of all, the Dodger Dogs aren't all that great. In fact, the Randy Jones' Louisville Sluggers are light years better. The pre-game (free) meal was nice, and the stadium itself is a wonderful place to play baseball.

The epitome of class: the ovation given retiring lead-off man Brett Butler as he came to bat the final time at home (in a pinch-hitting role), and the Dodger media and service personnel. The epitome of classless: Sterling Hitchcock, overpaid by about five million dollars, making fun of a reporter's shoes in the locker room after the game. Hey, Sterling, not everyone makes the money or receives free apparel like you do. Perhaps a little humility might do you some good.

Anyway, though not a Bum fan at all, I had hoped they would win the West only because we would be covering them in the play-offs. Since San Fran won, we stay home.

Now some local news. The Parkway Sports Complex (444 Broadway in El Cajon) is offering family swim memberships now. Utilize the 40 x 70 foot pool, the lap lanes, the jacuzzi, aqua fitness classes, private and group lessons, lockers and showers, as well as family picnic areas.

Like to play tennis? It also has lighted courts, USTA and USPTA certified instructors, a juniors program, private and group lessons and organized play.

To find out more, call 442-9623. Also check out its adult, co-ed and child roller hockey and indoor soccer facility.

In prep gridiron action, the El Cajon Valley Braves moved to 3-0 with a 28-20 win over Valhalla (0-3), as Dylan Mora booted three FGs; and another place-kicker, Andy Wharton (a girl!), tapped one in from 19 yards with 13 seconds left to give the West Hills Wolf Pack (3-0) a 31-28 victory over visiting Serra.

Jason Claytor scored three times and ran for 112 yards as Helix thumped El Camino, 28-15; Granite Hills (1-2), behind D.J. Anderson's 189 yards and two TDs, demolished Grossmont, 35-7; visiting Oceanside held El Capitan (1-2) to a measly 157 yards and crushed them, 26-14; and number one-ranked Carlsbad had no trouble in stopping the winless Monarchs of Monte Vista, 28-7.

The biggest upset of all occurred when Santana, after 15 consecutive losses, journeyed to Mount Miguel to stun the previously unbeaten Matadors, 10-7.

West Hills Wolf Pack basketball is presenting a "3-On-3 War On The Floor," Oct. 11 and 12 at the school gym (8756 Mast Blvd., Santee). Deadline for registration is Oct.8. Call 420-1089 for more information. [See story above.]

Speaking of gymnasiums, the Lakeside Boys & Girls Club will finally open its new facility (named the Bob & Kay Hill Memorial Auditorium) at 5:30 p.m. on Oct. 15. For details, contact Lesa or Jerry at 440-1600.

If you'd like information about East County placed in this column, just call me at 390-7103, or, for you use a computer, just drop me an E-mail at ikeforum@juno.com. What could be simpler? In the meantime, have a great sports week.
